“In FIFA 20 we made a big step towards the future, but this year’s game is all about delivering realism,” said Craig Duncan, the executive vice president and chief technology officer of EA Sports. “We’ve been working closely with the expert teams at EA’s Amisco Studios.

The motion capture data they've collected from real-life players has been expertly processed to ensure the right kind of on-ball actions and tackles feel just right. It's been a massive effort on the part of the team at Amisco and we feel there's never been a better way to play with and against the world's best players." Motion capture data gathered from players in EA's EA SPORTS Performance Institute allows players to perform actions in motion just as they do in real life. The system unlocks the ability to identify every player's actions in real time, and the processing of that data automatically determines the balance, weight and effectiveness of their actions as they play in full-scale matches. This processing also determines how the ball moves and performs, adapting to an ever-changing playing field and challenging the player to adapt his on-ball movement, so it's constantly in motion. PEP (Player Emotions Processor) allows in-game players to feel the intensity of a moment, and how they're responding, just as they would on the pitch. It adjusts intensity and responsiveness of a player based on the opponent or situation at the time, and the speed at which a player is performing. New Sound System brings a multitude of enhanced sound effects to FIFA 22, including immersive crowd chants and the intensifying roar of stadium announcements. Players get an added sense of realism when reacting to the crowd or hearing stadium announcements. Youthful Player Motion and YP Mechanics enhance player responsiveness by tying the number of physical attributes into their underlying YP (Youthful Player) ability model. Players now have more control over how they perform, and how their YP ability values are tweaked and altered as they mature. The new FIFA 22 engine is built on the foundation of the success of FIFA 19, which launched to critical acclaim on Xbox One, PlayStation 4 and Windows PC in September 2018. This new engine boasts a number of game-changing advances, including the FERSZ (Field Effects Simulation Zone), an all-new area that is based on the principle of field-scale physics,
