This function goes from datetime to string. And then it will display the selected records in a format that makes sense, with each day one row and then day and hour on next row. The function is named 'fnReformatData()'. I've tried searching to no avail, so if anyone can help me on how to use this function I'd be forever grateful. Here is the code, I didn't write the Crystal report myself though, I was given this code. Public Function fmReformatData(ByVal DateField As DateTime, ByVal DayField As String, ByVal HourField As String, ByVal DateField1 As String, ByVal Day1 As String, ByVal Hour1 As String, ByVal DateField2 As String, ByVal Day2 As String, ByVal Hour2 As String, ByVal DateField3 As String, ByVal Day3 As String, ByVal Hour3 As String, ByVal DateField4 As String, ByVal Day4 As String, ByVal Hour4 As String, ByVal DateField5 As String, ByVal Day5 As String, ByVal Hour5 As String) As String Using CR2 As New ReportDocument Try Dim rdt As New ReportDataSource() Dim rds As New ReportDefinition() Dim rd1 As New ReportDataSource() Dim rd2 As New ReportDataSource() Dim rd3 As New ReportDataSource()

News analysis by Jon Wertheim. (This is the introduction to a series of space-related opinion pieces I'll be writing for The Record about the prospects for space exploration in the Obama administration. If you find it a useful, thought-provoking read, I'd love for you to consider sponsoring me. Or, better yet, contribute to the fund that makes this possible. No charge, and you can give anonymously. No donation too small; all help is welcome. Thanks!) Here's a quick four-point summary of America's present position in space: 1. We have a space program. 2. If we keep it, we can continue to send people to orbit. 3. If we don't, we can't. 4. If we don't, we're not much of a spacefaring people. Some readers will recognize that, as it stands, the first three points are positive, the fourth is negative — but they'd be wrong. The success of our space program has effectively ensured that we continue to be a spacefaring people. Just as U.S. military power has always been tied to the quality of our armed forces, so the success of the space program has made us a spacefaring people. Before 1970, though, U.S. space programs almost always failed. The reasons were technological, and political. The technological hurdles were easy enough to see. Americans didn't have rockets powerful enough to throw something substantial beyond low earth orbit. (The main exception to this was the Vanguard rocket in 1958.) We couldn't build satellites strong enough to endure the intense radiation of space. And we couldn't build guidance systems smart enough to allow unmanned satellites to reliably steer themselves into the orbit of their target. The political hurdles were harder to discern. American military power depended on two things: the fact that we had a lot of soldiers, and that we could build a lot of

We will start with the planter and then we will build the stand. The planter is easy to make and can be made to fit any container. It can be made to fit any container of your choice and is great for gifts. The stand is easy to make but is not ready to use right away. The outside of the stand should be painted and the inside of the stand should be sanded before the stand is ready to use. I have provided all the drawings and cutouts for all the parts. Just print the plans and have fun making this planter. The first step is to cut out all the parts of the planter. Draw two lines parallel to each other across the container and slide out the parts. Measure the distance from the lines on each side and mark them with a pencil. Then the point of your router bit is the first place to cut. Cut out all the parts and a 1/4" t-slot in the center. Slide the inner parts back into the outer parts. Cut the top and bottom from the inner parts. Slide the top into the bottom. Slide the sides into the top and bottom. Fill the planter. If you are using a plastic container then use Plastic putty to hold the parts together.
