Q: Is there an equivalent of javac's -Xlint:deprecation for groovy? Is there an equivalent of javac's -Xlint:deprecation for groovy? A: In order to get back to the statement: Is there an equivalent of javac's -Xlint:deprecation for groovy? You would need to modify Groovy 2.0.0m2 (which you would have to do as you haven't yet released that version). What you will want to do is add a switch like this: -Xlint:deprecation and it will add that switch at the end of the JVM arguments that the compiler actually generates. If you happen to be running with -Xlint, that switch will just happen to be there and nothing will happen (it is not as if the compiler will even be run with that switch).

Sidenote: GitHub is giving me a 401 : Invalid status code from It seems that you'll need to go through a little hoop to get it.

Sessions to resign from the position. Trump said Sessions “never took control of the Justice Department,” adding, “So why aren’t the Committees and investigators, and of course our beleaguered A.G., looking into who the ‘Justice’ Department and FBI officials were in contact with during the Obama Administration.” Trump accused Sessions of not doing his job. “Attorney General Jeff Sessions has taken a VERY weak position on Hillary Clinton crimes (where are E-mails & DNC server) & Intel leakers!” Trump said, adding that he wants Sessions to get

“control of the Jeff Sessions Justice Department.” Sessions’ involvement in the Trump campaign appears to have angered the president, especially after FBI Director James Comey’s decision not to prosecute Clinton, despite several referrals by the FBI’s own inspector general. Comey testified before the Senate Intelligence Committee in early June on the Clinton emails and stated that if FBI investigators on the Clinton email probe had found classified information on the computer of former Secretary of Sublingual immunotherapy (SLIT) in nonatopic asthmatic children: a randomized study. The sublingual route seems to be effective and safe in delivering allergens to the respiratory tract. However, all published studies have included only adults or other adults with atopic conditions. We studied the efficacy and safety of sublingual immunotherapy (SLIT) in nonatopic asthmatic children. In a double-blind, placebo-controlled, randomized study, 28 children were allocated to receive a 3-month course of active SLIT with a standardized extract from house dust mite (HDM) (n = 14) or placebo (n = 14). The primary endpoint was a reduction in the morning peak expiratory flow rate (MEF(25-75)), assessed at baseline and at 3 months, after the last administration of each period of active treatment. No significant changes were found for the symptom diary, lung function (FEV1 and FEF(25-75)), and blood and urine laboratory tests. After 3 months of active treatment, mean MEF(25-75) values increased significantly in the placebo group (-0.81%; 95% CI, -2.1, 0.44), but not in the active treatment group (4.02%; 95% CI, -0.82, 8.89) ( $P = .004$ ). Although this positive effect of active treatment on symptom score was also significant in the placebo group ( $P = .02$ ), it was not significant in the active treatment group ( $P = .05$ ). The results
