Mesenchymal stem cells (MSCs) are multipotent cells that are frequently used for the treatment of various diseases, as evidenced by the fact that the US Food and Drug Administration has approved MSC-based cell therapy for the treatment of acute graft-versus-host disease. Recently, MSC-based immunomodulatory effects were observed in various models of inflammatory bowel disease, suggesting that these effects were partially attributable to immunoregulation. However, little is known regarding the immunomodulatory effects of MSCs in other diseases. This study aimed to investigate the immunoregulatory effects of oral MSCs in an immunosuppressive murine model of bone marrow suppression. We transplanted 5×10^6 human oral fibroblast-like synoviocytes (hFbLSOs) into lethally irradiated mice. Twenty-four days after the transplantation, hFbLSOs engrafted
