When a driver seated in a vehicle such as a car gets off the vehicle, he or she must approach the vehicle from a position remote from the vehicle. In view of this, the use of a ladder is conventionally known for the purpose of assisting a driver in getting off the vehicle. For example, Patent Literature 1 describes a ladder device to be mounted on a side of a vehicle to allow a user to easily get on or off the vehicle in the emergency. Patent Literature 2 describes a ladder device to be mounted on a vehicle to allow a user to easily access to the back side of the vehicle. The relationships of insulin and glucagon with plasma free fatty acids in healthy humans. The relationships of insulin and glucagon with plasma free fatty acids (FFA) in healthy humans was investigated using hyperinsulinemic (0.12 mU/kg/min) euglycemic clamps. In 9 normal subjects, insulin was found to be an effective suppressor of insulin secretion and plasma FFA concentration. Glucagon was found to be an effective stimulant of glucagon secretion and plasma FFA concentration, with no significant effect on glycemia. The relationships of insulin and glucagon with plasma FFA concentration in the fasting state in the presence of low plasma glucose concentrations and throughout the clamp in the absence of plasma glucose or insulin changes suggest that they may influence the interactions among the hormones which operate in the control of FFA metabolism. The fact that insulin decreases FFA release in vitro without a change in glycemia or glucose metabolism is consistent with the lack of effect of hyperinsulinemia on FFA metabolism in vivo. The finding that glucagon increases plasma FFA concentration provides further evidence for the existence of a hormonal mechanism which uncouples glycemia and glycolysis in the regulation of FFA metabolism.
