The purpose of this study was to assess the accuracy of magnetic resonance imaging (MRI) for patients with blunt cervical spine injury. The authors reviewed all the patients who underwent emergent MRI for suspected fractures of the cervical spine at a level I trauma center from January 2000 through December 2002. Patients were identified from the trauma registry. Patients with intubation and/or evidence of cervical spine injury on computerized tomography (CT) were excluded from the analysis. The authors also obtained data on patient age, mechanism of injury, MRI indication, and results of radiological examination. Sensitivity, specificity, positive predictive value (PPV), and negative predictive value (NPV) were calculated. The performance of clinical assessment alone was also compared to that of MRI for patients with neck pain and tenderness. A total of 290 patients were evaluated. Twenty-two patients with a history of head injury were excluded because of their confounding effect on the 6d1f23a050
